SUPREME COURT RULING IMPACTS SEARCH WARRANT TRAINING

by: Aaron Edens, POLICE TECHNICAL Deputy District Attorney Mike Galli, Santa Clara County
www.policetechnical.com

On June 25, 2014, the United States Supreme Court issued a unanimous ruling which requires law enforcement personnel to obtain a search warrant prior to searching a cell phone. This fundamental shift in the law immediately impacts the investigative process of law enforcement personnel and the instructional process of law enforcement academies and private trainers.

Simply put: We can’t do and what we did on June 24. Dramatic changes in established process and training, like the one created by the Supreme Court ruling, often create anxiety among personnel at all levels, but with this tension comes an opportunity to improve the field. While many academies will rush to create lesson plans to satisfy the new law, a pause should be taken to reevaluate and improve search warrant training altogether.

Law enforcement agencies throughout the U.S. utilize search warrant templates or ‘boilerplates’ that have been handed down from one investigator to another. Unfortunately, these templates, while tried and true, have failed to keep track of technological advances and are missing critical sources of evidence.

Nearly everyone in the United States has a mobile device such as a cell phone. A 2013 study by the Pew Research Center’s Internet and American Life Project found that 91% of adults own a cell phone. According to the National Center for Health Statistics 39.4% of households are wireless only. These statistics give law enforcement statistical certainty a criminal suspect owns a mobile phone.

Obtaining a search warrant for a mobile device to look for evidence is not as burdensome as some believe. If probable cause exists to arrest a suspect, probable cause exists to search the mobile device. The key is to articulate the likely usage of the device before, during, or after the commission of the crime.

Experience has shown there are certain types of crimes where a mobile device is unlikely to be used, but those crimes are few and far between. The instructors from POLICE TECHNICAL have encountered criminal cases involving mobile devices such as:

- Pedophiles who use their mobile devices to communicate with and recruit victims and to store images, videos, and other mementos of their heinous crimes.

- Drivers who communicate their location, plans, and intoxication level using social media, digital photos and videos, phone calls, and text messages from their mobile devices.
− Burglars who target specific locations and communicating about alarm systems, dogs, street lighting conditions, access points, and egress routes.

− Organized retail theft ‘booster rings’ who focus on specific stores and possess digital ‘shopping lists’ of preferred items to steal and fence.

− Car thieves who look for specific makes and models of vehicles and describe the best way to steal them as well as communicate police pursuit policies in the area.

Some crimes, such as narcotics dealing, require mobile communication devices. Gangs are conspiratorial and often use mobile devices to coordinate the group’s activities. Articulating these facts is essential in an affidavit to support the search of any seized device. When you consider applying for a search warrant, think about the nexus of the device to the crime. Is it probable the suspect(s) used the device before, after, or during the commission of the crime?

Common Search Warrant and Affidavit Errors: A review of law enforcement search warrants performed by POLICE TECHNICAL instructors revealed common errors and deficits in the standard language used to search a mobile device. Law enforcement investigators should review their search warrants and consider the following common errors and omissions:

− Failing to request the corresponding call detail records in addition to a search of the phone: Law enforcement has traditionally treated searching mobile devices and investigating the records cellular service providers maintain as two separate disciplines. In fact, both avenues of investigation should be explored simultaneously. The Supreme Court ruling provides an opportunity to blend the investigation of the mobile device and the corresponding cell phone company’s records together. If officers have probable cause to search a mobile device’s contents they also have probable cause to search cellular service provider’s records for corresponding evidence that may assist their investigation and/or prove their case. In many cases a search warrant was required to obtain cell site location information (CSLI), GPS data, other historical location data, and the stored content the provider maintained, such as incoming or archived voicemail messages and email messages. With the addition of a few lines to a search warrant affidavit and the face sheet of the warrant, law enforcement officers can now gain access to sources of data that were previously overlooked. The following language was adopted from a search warrant by Santa Clara County Deputy District Attorney Mike Galli.

The following items that may be contained in or at the cellular service provider, [INSERT PROVIDER] who has been determined to have provided service to the listed phone number [INSERT PHONE NUMBER] associated with the seized device.

a. Subscriber information, including by way of example and not limitation:
   1. Subscriber name
   2. Subscriber address
   3. Identifying information such as date of birth, driver license number, and/or social security number
   4. Subscriber contact information including electronic mail addresses, contact phone numbers also referred to as ‘can be reached numbers’

b. Billing and credit information, including by way of example and not limitation:
   1. Method and source of payment information including credit card numbers, electronic funds transfers, and locations of cash payments.
   2. Credit information including any credit report run by the provider prior to authorizing service

c. Service information, including by way of example and not limitation:
   1. Purchase and activation location
   2. Types of service subscribed to
   3. Additional phone numbers associated with the same account
4. Make, model, and serial numbers of the phone(s) associated with the account

d. Call detail records
1. Incoming/outgoing phone calls, SMS/MMS text message, including the content thereof, data events’ date, time, and duration of same
2. Cell site location information including beginning and ending cell sites for any recorded events, per call measurement data (PCMD), and/or timing advance (TA) information alternately known Real Time Data or Round Trip Data.

- Failing to investigate applications installed on the device: Increasingly, criminal suspects are using alternate communications methods from their mobile devices. Knowing what applications the suspect downloaded can help identify any other communications channels for follow-up investigations.

- Failing to search associated backup files: A user can store and transfer documents and files with services such as Dropbox and Google Drive, which could contain relevant evidence that is not recovered during a forensic examination of the mobile device. If this information is not requested in a search warrant, the company will not provide it.

- Using broad language: The phrase “any and all” has been seen as a catchall by law enforcement officers writing search warrants for years. Unfortunately, the phrase has been found unconstitutionally broad in meeting the reasonable particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment by U.S. Courts.

- Failing to support the items to be searched in the affidavit: Every item to be seized pursuant to the search warrant must be supported in the affidavit, but there are templates that don’t follow this rule. The solution is a warrant that is specific enough to search for and locate the relevant evidence require time and obsession with detail.

- Not listing external storage media, including by way of example and not limitation, Micro SD cards: Most law enforcement search warrants do not specify Micro SD cards as an item to be searched, and they should. While there is no specific case law addressing this issue, an argument could be made that Micro SD card is a separate container.

- Failing to authorize password bypass: Apple and Google are able to either circumvent handset security features and provide data from the device or remotely reset the security features. When seeking a search warrant for an Apple or Google device, it may be prudent to include the appropriate language in the original warrant to prevent repeated trips to the magistrate.

- Failing to specify deleted data: With models of mobile devices and operating systems, modern forensic techniques are able to recover data even after it has been deleted. It may be wise to address the issue in the initial search warrant.

- Failing to list the possible need for assistance from other agencies: Law enforcement agencies usually rely on larger municipal, state, and/or federal law enforcement agencies to assist them with evidence recovery from a device. It is good practice to build judicial authorization for this practice into the search warrant.

- Failing to seek a waiver of statutory timelines for execution of the mobile device search warrant: Every state has a statutory time requirement for a warrant, but it may not correspond to the forensic examiner’s availability. If the forensic examiner won’t be able to begin his or her examination prior to the statutory time limit, seek a judicial waiver.
Conclusion: The Supreme Court’s decision was unanimous and emphatic. Absent exigent circumstances or other warrantless search exception, such as searchable probation or parole, law enforcement officers will need to obtain a warrant to search a suspect’s phone. Law enforcement academies are presented with a choice when considering the new requirement: Lament the decision and complain about how it made an already difficult job more complicated or adapt. As a benefit, investigators can leverage the probable cause requirement to target sources of information that were previously overlooked such as provider records, cell site location data, application data, and backup files.

Obtaining a search warrant has additional benefits. It makes it more difficult for a defense attorney to suppress evidence obtained as a result of the judicially authorized search. It also gives law enforcement officers the opportunity to hone their search warrant writing skills, which can then be applied to other criminal investigations requiring a warrant. Search warrants will no longer be considered the exclusive purview of the experienced investigator, detective, or narcotics officer. Patrol officers and deputies will find themselves writing search warrants for phones to recover evidence related to their arrests, and progressive academies will teach them.

STUDY FINDS MOTORCYCLIST FATALITIES FELL IN 2013
Source: GHSA News Release, May 6, 2014

For only the second year since 1997, U.S. motorcyclist fatalities are projected to decrease in 2013, according to a new analysis of preliminary state data released by the Governors Highway Safety Association (GHSA). The final projected motorcyclist fatality total for 2013 will be 4,610 – approximately 7% less than the 4,957 recorded in 2012 and nearly identical to the 4,612 motorcyclist deaths in 2011. Weather, according to the report, was the predominant factor to explain the drop in motorcyclist fatalities from 2012 to 2013. The first six months of 2012 were unusually warm and dry across the nation, prompting an uptick in ridership. The weather in the first nine months of 2013, however, was cooler and wetter, similar to 2011, when fatalities dropped in many states. GHSA members nationwide echoed this finding. APPROVAL OF MINUTES: The Executive Committee meeting minutes for the June 2, 2013, Portland, Oregon meeting (previously distributed) were approved as submitted. The MOTION for approval was made by Pritt (FL) and seconded by Melville (KY). The motion passed.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR BRIEFING:
Executive Director Michael Becar reported on the following items:

– There have been recent changes to the POST Directors in the following states: RI, KY, HI, DE, and NC – International work is expanding. Following the recent mission to Nigeria, the Nigerian authorities requested that IADLEST facilitate training for some of their key personnel. Oregon DPSST offered to host the contingent, and will train eight (8) representatives in Instructor Development and arrange for some local ride-alongs. London, England, is requesting IADLEST provide DDACTS training under contract. IADLEST will be reaching out to the membership to identify SMEs.

– Grants:

  • Blue Courage: two of the three pilot sites have been selected. Arizona has completed their pilot. Washington has been selected and is in the planning stage. Florida has expressed interest in the third pilot.

  • DOJ Analyst Training: IADLEST has formed a consortium with the other grantees of the project.

  • NHTSA: Meetings were held in the Washington, DC, headquarters of NHTSA to propose a new Umbrella Agreement. The current agreement expires in September 2014. There will be $500k allocated for DDACTS training in 2014, but it is NHTSA’s goal to allocate future money to the states.

– Projects:

  • Has made presentations to the Texas and Florida Academy Directors, and has a request from California for the same.

  • Working with Indiana Director Rusty Goodpaster on an Academy Directors’ course. IADLEST will need to identify SMEs.

  • Proposes beginning a new project that would create a national certification of training programs by IADLEST. The central repository for the review of training courses through NLEARN and PAPA haven’t been utilized. The proposal would be for stringent standards and SME review for this fee-based service, with the potential for a reliable revenue stream to the association that isn’t tied to grants. The concept would have IADLEST ask the states to recognize the national certification as the primary goal; but as a secondary activity, IADLEST would submit any state-specific forms and documentation to those states that still require it. There was a MOTION by Harvey (MI) to move the project forward, seconded by Clark (NV). The motion passed.

  • Met with DHS and FLETC representatives along with Vickers (TX), Alzaharna (AK) and Dan Setzer to discuss the possible integration of NLEARN into the DHS Homeland Security Information Network (HSIN) system. Donna Roy and Sandy Peavey subsequently made a presentation to the Executive Committee on the HSIN system, and asked for suggestions to improve and enhance the system to increase usage by state and local law enforcement.
• Met with the new Director of the COPS Office along with DOJ Assistant Attorney General Mason with President Vickers. There were positive conversations about the NDI. The DOJ officials outlined their five top priority areas, and IADLEST has expertise in three of them. DOJ is looking for grant ideas; and topics such as a POST Desk Reference Guide, DDACTS, Military Police Transition, and an online version of the IADLEST Sourcebook are some that may be considered. There is interest in a national dialog and research on reserve and auxiliary law enforcement officer standards. COPS Office Director Davis subsequently made an introduction at the Executive Committee meeting, stated that they will have a booth at the Florida IADLEST Annual Conference, and reinforced his commitment to training. He looks forward to the relationship with IADLEST and sees the opportunity for partnership.

• There were 45 responses to the “Call for Presentations 2014 IADLEST Annual Conference”, and 12 were selected.

• Yvonne established an IADLEST Facebook page.

DEPUTY DIRECTOR BRIEFING: Deputy Director Judge reported that current new membership registrations are running three Academy Directors for every POST Director. He reinforced that this membership group has unique needs that should be supported by IADLEST programs, initiatives and conference activities.

NLEARN SYSTEM: NLEARN System Administrator Dan Setzer reported that the system continues to grow in registered users and data entry. The website continues to be well-received.

IADLEST TREASURER’S REPORT

– Accounts Reports/Financial Statement: Treasurer Melville (KY) distributed the current financial information for all accounts. All the accounts are accurate and documented. The procedures work well for the Executive Director to allocate funds from the accounts, and there have been no complaints from vendors. There was a MOTION by Clark (NV) to accept the Treasurer’s Report, second by Harvey (MI). The motion passed.

– Audit Committee Report: Audit Committee Chair Rusty Goodpaster (IN) reported that the audit report from Crandall, Swenson, Gleason, and Wadsworth identified no deficiencies in internal controls or material weaknesses. Page 22 of the audit report identified one error and identified that IADLEST had already taken steps to prevent such errors in the future. There was a MOTION by Mann (AZ) to accept the audit report, second by Clark (NV). The motion passed.

ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW OF CURRENT BUSINESS ITEMS: President Vickers (TX) reported on the following items:

– Future Meetings: 2014 Annual IADLEST Conference: Destin, FL. In addition to the previously scheduled activities, there is interest in arranging a motorcycle ride prior to the conference. Director Pritt (FL) has contacted local Harley-Davidson dealerships for rates.

– 2014 Fall Business Meeting: The Fall Business meeting will be scheduled in conjunction with the IACP Conference in Orlando, FL. The tentative dates would be October 25-26, 2014.

– FLETC Police on Police: Dick Clark deferred a report until there is an update.

– Nomination Committee Appointments: Arlen Ciechanowski (IA), David Harvey (MI), and William Muldoon (NE) have been appointed to the Nomination Committee for 2014. Persons interested in running for IADLEST office in 2014 should contact one of those committee members.
COMMITTEE/SPECIAL ASSIGNMENT REPORTS:

- DHS Response to IEDs Stakeholder Conference: Charles Rapp (MD) has been asked to represent IADLEST, and will prepare a post-conference report that will be published on the website.

- IACP Training & Education Committee (From Additions to the Agenda): Mann (AZ) is the IADLEST representative to this committee. The bulk of this committee’s work is determining the classes to be held at the IACP Conferences. It is his observation that the proposals that are accepted are frequently the ones sponsored by a committee member or the Chair. He suggests that IADLEST prepare a proposal to make a conference presentation on POST issues.

- California POST Safe Driving Campaign: Clark is the IADLEST representative to this committee. The program listed its greatest success in 2013 as having no law enforcement related traffic deaths (for the first time). Telemetry in vehicles will soon allow supervisors to review driving techniques. There is research being held on driver visibility-enhanced clothing.

- FLETC Police-on-Police (Formerly Blue-on-Blue): Clark is the IADLEST representative to this committee. The committee met by teleconference (on HSIN). They are identifying lessons learned after FLETC’s research using officers in live scenarios and where training needs to be focused. There will be a presentation at the Florida conference.

OLD BUSINESS

IADLEST Mission to Nigeria: Harvey (MI) reported that he, along with Val Lubans (CT) and Steve Okoro (FL) traveled to Nigeria, hosted by the Lagos Police. He reported that the hosts provided excellent care of them. They learned the functions of law enforcement, did an assessment of the current operations, and assessed their Academy operations. Based upon the observations, they made recommendations related to performing a Job Task Analysis, establishing a POST-style commission, and other areas of improvement. He prepared a report for the Association. There was significant feedback among the membership present expressing appreciation of Harvey, Lubans, and Okora to travel to a hazardous area and represent the Association, reflecting on their commitment and courage. The mission enhanced IADLEST’s international visibility and credibility.

There was a MOTION to accept the report by Clark (NV), seconded by Melville (KY). The motion passed.

NEW BUSINESS

Life Membership Nomination: Lloyd Halvorson (ND) served for many years as the law enforcement academy director of the Lake Region State College in North Dakota.
