

“MAD SCIENCE” in Instructional Design

OVERVIEW:

Instructors ask all the time, what's the single most important attribute of any instructor? That's easy, creative and outside the box thinking in instructional design! The goal of any training program is to mirror, as closely as possible, how the student will be expected to perform in the field. The role of any instructor is to take their course curriculum and bring it to life, within the confines and available resources at their training site.

Achieving that within the confines of a safe training environment requires a thoughtful approach, consideration of what training aids are available, and a whole lot of ideas.

INSTRUCTOR:

JIM GORDON,

IADLEST Project Manager,
National Certification Program (NCP)

During this month's webinar, we will:

- Demonstrate different instructional resources and how they might be used in the classroom
- Explore methods of connecting student backgrounds and experiences with your course curriculum
- Develop an articulate lesson plan that takes your students to the highest levels of learning

So, ready to play some Mad Science?
Bring your best ideas, let's create!

Jim Gordon is a retired captain from Stanislaus County Sheriff's Office in Central California, with 25 years of service. Jim served as a field training officer (FTO) and as the FTO program administrator. After being promoted to lieutenant, Jim served as the regional academy director where he spearheaded the design into one of California's first fully integrated, scenario-based training programs.

Jim is a graduate of the California POST Master Instructor Program. He holds an associate degree in administration of justice, a bachelor's degree in vocational education, and a master's degree in Adult Education. Jim also worked with the CA POST Instructor Development Team teaching instructional technology and instructor development all over California.

Jim now works for IADLEST as the National Certification Program (NCP) Program Manager. He resides in Wyoming with his family.
